The lede

On August 24 the Supreme Court granted the government's stay application in No. 26A124 and stayed the injunction that had barred the mail-ballot executive order in the District of Massachusetts A. The order came on the twenty-eighth day of silence, not the thirty-fourth this report had projected, and it turned on jurisdiction rather than on the order's legality. The District Court, the per curiam opinion holds, had to "speculate about whether the Postal Service would propose a rule," then about how it would weigh comments, then about whether it would issue a final rule at all; and "Federal courts review final rules, not proposed rules—and certainly not antecedent internal directives to propose a rule" A. The companion application from Alabama and other States, 26A139, was denied as moot. The opinion is per curiam and states no vote tally; Justice Sotomayor dissented joined by Justice Kagan, and Justice Jackson dissented separately.

The sentence that closed the reasoning opened a door: "If the Postal Service's final rule harms the States, they may challenge that rule." The final rule had been sent to the Office of the Federal Register three days before that sentence was written. It published on August 26 as 91 FR 54966, carrying an effective date of August 21 — five days before its own publication A. Twenty-four jurisdictions and the Governor of Pennsylvania sued the same day; by August 27 Judge Talwani had found the government in violation of the injunction it told the Supreme Court it was obeying, vacated that injunction under compulsion of the Supreme Court's ruling, and enjoined seven parts of the published rule under a fourteen-day restraining order that expires September 10 A.

The week subtracted as well. This report has carried the Federal Register as its cleanest standing absence: a term search for the Epstein Files Transparency Act that returned zero documents, week after week, for months. On August 27 it returned one A. What published is examined below, and it is not a redaction log.

Architecture I — The family money

The certification. On August 26, in Sun v. World Liberty Financial LLC, N.D. Cal. 3:26-cv-03360-JD, World Liberty's own counsel filed a supplemental disclosure under Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 7.1(a)(2) certifying that the citizenship attributed to the defendant includes the United Arab Emirates — for World Liberty Financial LLC itself and for WLF Holdco LLC — and naming two entities in the chain, "Aryam Investment 1 SPV RSC (DE) LLC" and "Aryam Investment 1 SPV RSC Ltd.," both Emirati A. The same three-page table lists the Donald J. Trump Revocable Trust, the Donald J. Trump, Jr. Revocable Trust, the Eric F. Trump Revocable Trust, Barron Trump as a natural person, Zachary and Alexander Witkoff, Zachary Folkman, DT Marks DeFi LLC, DJT Holdings LLC and AMGUS, LLC. It is the first primary record of Emirati membership inside World Liberty. It states no percentage, and the "49 percent" that has circulated for a year still has no document behind it.

What the agency said twelve days earlier. OCC Corporate Decision #1385, August 14, ruled the conflicts and Emoluments comments "outside the scope of the OCC's review because neither World Liberty Financial, Inc., nor any foreign investors in that entity, are a party to this application," and answered the CFIUS commenters by stating that "investors in World Liberty Financial, Inc., would not have an investment in, or control over, the Bank" A. The same decision records that the OCC "received passivity commitments from certain U.S. and non-U.S. investors in World Liberty Financial," and that four of the seven comments it received, from four commenters, raised conflicts involving the President, his family, Alexander and Zachary Witkoff, and "United Arab Emirati investors in World Liberty Financial, Inc." The agency did not deny the foreign investors. It placed them outside its frame and approved the charter. The bank's parent of record is WLTC Holdings LLC, a separate Delaware company, and nothing in either document puts an Emirati investor inside it. Two records, twelve days apart, one architecture. The edge between them stays dotted ABSENT.

The correction the ledger forced. This report has carried, for a full cycle, the statement that AI Financial Corporation disclosed no Nasdaq deficiency notice and filed no 8-K under Item 3.01 in 2026. Both halves are false. The company was notified on July 1, 2026 that it fails the one-dollar minimum closing bid price under Nasdaq Listing Rule 5550(a)(2), June 30 having been the thirtieth consecutive business day of deficiency, and disclosed it the next day in an 8-K under that exact item, accession 0001493152-26-031925 A. The letter gives the company 180 days, "or until December 28, 2026," to regain compliance, and the filing names a reverse split among the options under consideration. The number this report failed to open for a full cycle was sitting in the registrant's own current reports. A ledger that is never re-opened stops being a measurement.

The figure restored. The ExodusPoint holding that anchors correction C-002 was carried as unverified last week after a failed search. It is verified. The filer is CIK 0001736225; the Q2 2026 13F-HR, accession 0001736225-26-000010, filed August 14 for the period ending June 30, reports "AI FINL CORP," CUSIP 47089W104, 2,170,301 shares, sole investment discretion, value $1,269,843 A. The figures match Brief 001 exactly. The implied price is roughly 58 cents a share, which is the same fact as the Nasdaq notice seen from a different filing.

The feed. Trump Media filed an 8-K on August 28, accession 0001437749-26-029174, whose Exhibit 99.1 is a transcript of interim chief executive Kevin McGurn on CNBC four days earlier A. In it he puts a number on the product this report has tracked since the Form 425: paying customers receive "a 50-millisecond advantage" on posts, and the customer count is "getting into the mid-teens now, and we're climbing" — against "more than 10 customer agreements" on August 11. He says the company "just signed one of the largest financial data and information distributors at the end of last week" and will "license it to large language models," naming no counterparty; no 8-K under Item 1.01 discloses that agreement. His only denial is narrow and accurate: "First and foremost, we're not part of a lawsuit for this particular product." That denies party status. It does not deny the advantage, which he affirms.

The non-answers. The Warren–Garcia letter to the President on his disclosed stock trades set a response deadline of August 28. It passed with no response located ABSENT. It was the first clock on this ledger that had not already expired when it was entered, and it expired. The letter itself corrects a figure this report had been carrying: it asks about the 3,555 trades in the Office of Government Ethics Form 278-T covering the first quarter of 2026, and attributes "more than 14,000" to a website and 21,000 to Bloomberg; the "more than 17,000" in our ledger appears nowhere in it A. The older clocks advanced without answers: Warren–Reed on the WLFI buyers to 272 days, USD1 and PancakeSwap to 230, the Prince Group follow-up to 96, the minerals-equity letter to 185, the immunity letters to 41 with five of eleven addressees still silent. Steve Witkoff's Form 278e is unchanged at 382 days from filer signature, agency-certified December 12, 2025, the Office of Government Ethics line still unsigned A. AI Financial has filed nothing since the August 17 quarterly report, and the transferability the company asserted for August 12 remains corroborated by no filing and no chain record ABSENT.

Architecture II — Executive power

The finding of violation. On August 25, Judge Talwani found that the government had breached her August 11 preliminary injunction: "on Friday evening, August 21, 2026, Defendant USPS completed rule making by sending a Final Rule... to the Office of the Federal Register, with an immediate effective date of August 21, 2026" A. The government's answer was that the rule's own text disclaimed application to 2026 elections; the court replied that "[t]hese arguments ignore the court's explicit directive not to 'initiat[e] or complet[e]' rulemaking." Against the government's protestation that "[t]he United States takes its obligation to comply with court orders very seriously" — an institutional assertion of good faith, not a denial that the rule was sent — the court found the violation and imposed "no remedy other than identifying the violation." In a footnote it went further: "The Supreme Court accepted the government's feigned compliance, finding a likelihood of irreparable harm where the injunction 'prevents the Postal Service from so much as initiating a rulemaking'" A. That is a district judge stating on the record that the Solicitor General's office misrepresented its compliance to the Supreme Court. It is her finding, and it is reported here as her finding.

The vacatur. One day later the same judge granted the government's motion to reconsider and vacated her own injunction, holding that "in light of the Supreme Court's decision in Trump v. California, Plaintiff Organizations are not likely to prevail as to ripeness without amending their complaint to reflect the fact that a Final Rule has now issued" A. Both injunctions the rule had named as reasons for its own self-limitation were then gone: one stayed by the Supreme Court, one vacated by the judge who wrote it. The Postal Service said so, telling Reuters the injunctions "no longer preclude the implementation of the Rule" — an unsigned institutional statement carried by one origin B.

The restraining order. On August 27 Talwani granted temporary restraining orders in both the old case and the new one, staying seven parts of the final rule as to any election on or before November 3 and directing that the Postal Service "may take no further preparatory steps or implement in any way" for those elections A. Counsel had twenty-four hours to notify Postal Service employees "that they are required to comply with this Order, under penalty of contempt," and to file the notice. The notice was filed on August 28: a mandatory stand-up talk to all employees, telling them the order "is effective nationwide for 14 days until Sept. 10" and that the Service "must continue to transmit and deliver any mail-in or absentee ballots presented for mailing" A. Documented compliance, in the same case and the same week as a documented violation. The government appealed the same day; the First Circuit docketed the appeals as Nos. 26-1987, 26-1988 and 26-1989, and no stay has issued A.

What the Court was told, and when. In the restraining-order opinion Talwani recorded that the government asserted "without citation" that publication of a final rule was "already known to the Supreme Court," and found otherwise: "The Supreme Court gave no indication that it was aware of the Final Rule when the Order was issued… this court cannot assume that the Justices received the brief prior to the issuance of the per curiam Order a few hours later" A. The Supreme Court's own docket carries three entries under August 24: the applicants' supplemental brief filed, the application referred to the Court, and the application granted A.

A new emergency. On August 26 the President signed Executive Order 14421, "Declaring a National Emergency To Secure the United States Bulk-Power System," under the International Emergency Economic Powers Act and the National Emergencies Act; it published August 31 at 91 FR 55995 A. It finds the foreign supply of bulk-power equipment "an unusual and extraordinary threat," and reaches backwards: the Secretary of Energy may impose conditions on equipment "acquired or installed before the date of this order, including requirements to identify, isolate, monitor, secure, disconnect, replace, or remove such equipment." "Covered Foreign Entity" is defined by arms-embargo or sanctions status under the arms-export regulations, or by the Secretary's own determination; no country is named. Implementing rules are due in 120 days, procurement revisions in 180. It is the only structural executive order of the window; the Federal Register's presidential feed for the period returns ten documents and contains no Insurrection Act proclamation, no federalization of a Guard, and no election emergency ABSENT.

The files. The Department of Justice ended a months-long Federal Register absence on August 27 with a seven-page notice, 91 FR 55356, signed August 21 by Associate Attorney General Stanley E. Woodward, Jr., and published "pursuant to Section 2 of the Act" A. Its appendix is a letter dated February 14, 2026, captioned "Re: Epstein Files Transparency Act — Section 3 Report to Congress" — the same letter that has sat on the Department's own disclosure page since February. Six pages of it are published as scanned images with no text layer; the Federal Register's own full-text rendering of pages 55357 through 55362 reads, six times, "[GRAPHIC] [TIFF OMITTED]" A. The list of officials and politically exposed persons the statute requires is therefore not searchable in the Federal Register. Section 2(c)(2) requires a written justification for redactions; Section 3 requires a categorical report. The Department published the second under the heading of the first, and told Judge Sullivan the same day that "the Department's notice was published in today's copy of the Federal Register… Therefore, no declaration, or any further action, is needed" A.

The category, defended again. That filing, ECF 37, was the response Judge Sullivan ordered on August 21 to the plaintiff's showing that the Department had already published nearly a hundred sets of handwritten notes underlying its own interview reports. The Department's answer keeps the category and adds to it: the published examples do not "undermine the government's stated rationales for withholding such notes—that they are duplicative, the quality control checks are less effective on handwritten material, and that the risk of inadvertent disclosure of victim information is substantially higher—nor does it amount to a waiver or concession as to other documents" A. It calls the plaintiff's characterization "false" as to the truthfulness of prior representations, a narrow and record-specific denial. It urges the court to "hesitate before ordering in camera review," warning of "line-by-line review of redactions to millions of pages." In three pages the phrase "2(c)" appears once, quoting the plaintiff's own request. The Department has now defended the category five ways and the withholding none. On August 24 it also filed a protective notice of appeal of the June 25 order, docketed as D.C. Cir. No. 26-5299 A.

The appeals, and one correction. This report recorded that no appeal had been noticed from Judge Chuang's August 17 judgment vacating the FBI headquarters relocation. One was: the notice was filed August 19 as ECF 36, and the Fourth Circuit assigned it No. 26-2158 on August 24 A. The judgment ran for the plaintiffs on Counts 1, 2 and 6, and no stay has been sought in the circuit. The en banc D.C. Circuit case over the criminal-contempt inquiry, unnamed in this report for three weeks, is In re: Donald Trump, No. 25-5452; its June 22 order sets argument for 9:30 a.m. on Tuesday, September 29, in Courtroom 20, before eleven named judges, and keeps the December 12, 2025 administrative stay in effect A. That order set briefs of amici for respondents due August 28, and six were filed that day A. In Los Angeles the contempt fines are being paid: $3,500 by intra-governmental transfer on August 25, the same as August 18, seven days at $500 A. In the same case the government reported that ICE "forensically imaged the 22 phones from the ICE agents who were present at 10 of the 15 operations" at issue — a figure that supersedes the three-phones-per-fortnight pace this report had been carrying A.

A statute, in a State. On August 25 the California Senate passed Assembly Bill 1539 by 30 to 9 with one member not voting, and on August 26 the Assembly concurred 77 to 0 with two not voting; the bill went to engrossing and enrolling the same day A. It amends three sections of the Elections Code to require a representative of each qualified party, and of each independent and write-in presidential candidate, to certify to the Secretary of State under penalty of perjury that the nominees "are both qualified to be elected President under the Twenty-Second Amendment" — and bars the names from the ballot if the certification is not made by the seventy-fifth day before the general election, or the fourteenth for write-ins A. The Governor had taken no recorded action as of August 30 ABSENT.

Architecture III — The wars and the count

Economic D-Day, as the Treasury wrote it. On August 24 the Treasury announced "Operation Economic Outcast: an unprecedented, whole-of-government, economic campaign against the Islamic Republic of Iran and its enablers" A. The Secretary's framing is his own: "In the Second World War, D-Day marked the historic beginning of a campaign with our allies to target and drive the enemy from its positions, including those in third countries... Our objective is to sever every economic lifeline that sustains this tyrannical regime until Tehran stands alone." The instruments are five sectoral determinations under Executive Order 13902 — digital assets, technology, gold, aviation and shipping — published August 27 at 91 FR 55265, together with two new general licenses A. The release says the Office of Foreign Assets Control "sanctioned nearly 60 entities, individuals, and vessels." Several outlets rendered that as a flat sixty. The Treasury did not write sixty.

The bank. On August 28 the Treasury proposed a rule under Section 311 of the USA PATRIOT Act finding Banque Misr UAE a foreign financial institution "of primary money laundering concern," which would cut its access to United States correspondent accounts; the department estimates it processed approximately $1.8 billion for 103 companies between January 2024 and June 2026 B. The proposal is not yet in the Federal Register and the comment period has not opened ABSENT.

The blockade, and a number that disagrees with itself. Central Command's running tally moved from 68 vessels redirected on August 21 to 75 on August 27 and 82 on August 28, with disabled and boarded unchanged at three and two since the Vela Nova on August 11 B. On August 28 the combatant commander released a video declaring internationally recognized transit routes in the Strait of Hormuz "free of Iranian sea mines," adding that "Iran has exported zero oil from its shores since we resumed the naval blockade in mid-July" and "No ships have entered or left an Iranian port without our permission" B. That video gives the vessel figure as 75; the command's own post the same day gives 82. Two outputs of one command on one day, eight vessels apart. The President had said the mines were cleared ten days earlier, on August 18: "All water mines have been removed or detonated." Two dated claims, ten days apart, from two authorities. No causal or corroborative edge is drawn between them.

The count, going backwards. The casualty board displayed 758 wounded and 18 killed on August 25, with 345 of the recorded casualties falling after July 7 — and the sub-count attributed to the named operation has fallen from 500 in July to 431 C. That reading rests on one outlet reading a screen, because the casualty system renders only in a browser and returns nothing to a direct request; it is rejected as a finding and reported as a rejection. What survives at tier is the shape: the total rises, the named operation shrinks, and cases move into a category created in July that begins on July 7. The only official explanation on the record remains the July 26 line about "site anomalies... being resolved in coordination with the military services," which addresses neither the cutoff nor the decrement. The bill that would end the practice is now anchored at the primary record: S. 5300, introduced by Senator Duckworth on August 6 with seventeen cosponsors, read twice and referred to Armed Services, no action since A. On August 24 every Democratic member of the Senate Armed Services Committee except its ranking member asked the chairman for a hearing on extended deployments B. A third war-powers vehicle also exists and had not been in this report: S.J.Res. 211, introduced by Senator Hickenlooper on August 6 with ten cosponsors, referred and untouched A. Senate roll call #231 of August 8 remains the last vote of record; numbers 232 and 233 do not exist A.

The paper, in court. On August 27 the fired publisher, editor-in-chief and reporter of the military newspaper sued the Pentagon's chief spokesman, the Secretary and the Department: Slavin v. Parnell, D.D.C. 1:26-cv-03009, before Judge Trevor McFadden A. On August 29 the department agreed to keep all three on administrative leave a further week rather than complete the terminations, with a hearing on a restraining order set for September 4 B. In its filings the department describes the employees' comments as "designed to undermine the government agency that employs them" — a characterization of the speech, not a denial of retaliation. The paper covered its own lawsuit, and continued to file on the war. The firings are paused, not reversed.

Enforcement, and the file that does not move. Immigration and Customs Enforcement has published no detention dataset newer than the one posted July 20, whose snapshot date is July 11 and whose figure is 65,765; the page still reads "Updated: 07/20/2026," the file's own timestamp is July 20, and twelve candidate filenames covering the six weeks since return nothing A. The population anchor is now six weeks and five days stale, measured at the source. The Mega Hub solicitation's deadline conflict has widened rather than resolved: the machine field says August 27, the agency's written answer says August 31, the solicitation document itself says August 24, and vendor question 126, which asks which date controls, has a blank answer field A. The August 27 deadline passed inside this window with the question unanswered. Camp East Montana still shows one transaction, obligated equal to base and all options, and a period of performance ending September 30, 2026; the extension to 2027 reported in July has not posted, thirty-one days from expiry A. Three award records entered the corpus this week: a renovation of an agency-owned San Antonio structure "to serve as a processing and detention facility," $17,333,698.50 to GardaWorld Federal Services, placed against a Navy contract vehicle; a sole-source real-property-services award to SK2 LLC modified on August 27 to $11,476,466.05 with performance in the Otay Mesa postal code; and fourteen skip-tracing task orders issued on a single day, August 27, totalling roughly $57 million A. No detainee-death notification issued in the window ABSENT.

The node where the architectures touch

The clearest three-body intersection of the week runs through four days in one case. Each vertex is a document. The center is a filing whose receipt is the open question, and no vertex refers to another.

DOTTED EDGE · ADJACENCY, NOT CAUSE

The Supreme Court's August 24 order, holding that courts review final rules and not proposed ones A · the final rule, sent to the Office of the Federal Register on the evening of August 21 and published August 26 with an effective date five days before publication A · the district court's August 25 finding that sending it violated an injunction the government had told the Supreme Court it was obeying A. At the center sits the applicants' supplemental brief, docketed on August 24 in the same hours as the order, which the district court found the Court gave "no indication" it had seen. What would make an edge solid is a record of what the Court knew and when: an order addressing the rule, a response to the enforcement motion that defends the timing, or a statement from the Postal Service explaining why a rule held since June was sent at nine o'clock on a Friday night. None exists ABSENT.

What would change the tier

The blockade tally moves to primary the moment Central Command's own site serves its releases again, or a written release carries the figure; it currently rests on the command's social posts read through carriers, and the eight-vessel gap between the commander's video and the command's post on August 28 will not resolve without one. The casualty count moves to primary when the casualty system renders to anything other than a browser, or when the Department answers the Armed Services request in writing; until then the sub-count decrement stays a rejection.

Three documents due in the next fortnight would each close something open. The plaintiff's reply in the compliance case, due September 3, will test whether a categorical report published under a per-redaction heading satisfies the statute; a ruling on it is the first judicial reading of that substitution. The Federal Communications Commission's opposition in the broadcast-license case, due the same day, is the first substantive government position on whether it will move against those licenses. The Governor of California's action on Assembly Bill 1539 converts a passed bill into either a statutory certification requirement in the largest electoral-vote State or a veto message; both are records.

Two absences would close on a single filing each. A modification posting against the Camp East Montana award would end a two-month reported-but-unposted extension, and the contract expires September 30 either way. A registration statement or a current report from AI Financial addressing the August 12 transferability would replace a company assertion with a filing; the company has filed nothing since August 17.

Rejected below [B], with reasons

The vote that is not in the opinion. Every outlet checked reported the mail-ballot stay as six to three. The slip opinion is per curiam and states no tally; the number is inferred from three noted dissents C. The primary record does show the composition: a per curiam opinion, Justice Sotomayor dissenting joined by Justice Kagan, and Justice Jackson dissenting separately, which is what this report carries. Secondary accounts also described the Court as granting the applications of the administration and twelve Republican-led States together; the docket says the States' application in 26A139 was "denied as moot" A. The claim is rejected because the record contradicts it, not because it is thinly sourced.

A thousand monitors. The figure of "approximately 1,000" election monitors for November, attributed to the civil-rights division head in an August 17 broadcast interview, appeared this week across seven mastheads. All seven trace to that one interview; no Department document states it C. What the Department's own releases show is different and smaller: on August 25, monitoring a South Carolina runoff with four division attorneys and two from the local United States Attorney's office, and "over 80 monitors across seven states and over 200 polling locations this primary season" A. That release also quietly narrowed its own comparator: the August 18 release said the Department sent monitors to nine states in the 2022 midterms; the August 25 release says nine states "during the primary season." The two sentences are not the same claim and should not be quoted as one.

An arbitration ruling that did not happen. Nine crypto outlets reported that a California court denied World Liberty's motion to compel arbitration. The docket shows no denial: on August 20 the judge ordered counsel to meet and confer in person to identify which claims are arbitrable, and on August 27 the parties stipulated to defer the motion entirely in favour of a threshold jurisdictional question, with all of the defendant's defenses "such as those asserted in its Motion to Compel Arbitration" expressly preserved A. The motion is pending and undecided C. The related claim that the quarterly report flags a going concern is rejected for the second cycle running: the filing contains no such language, only “substantial liquidity concerns.”

Numbers without a settlement. A blockade tally of 70 vessels on August 23 rests on a single aggregator naming four outlets without linking any of them C. A Brent price of $88.29 on August 28 is one of four mutually inconsistent vendor readings for the same day; the direction — three consecutive sessions down from $94.39 on August 21 — survives, the decimal does not C. An independent casualty tally said to exceed 900 wounded is rejected because neither its author nor its method is named C. A presidential statement of August 26 about “a very big victory” could not be tied to a fetchable interview or a confirmed date, so no presidential statement in this window is carried at tier C.

Checked for and not found. The Postal Service system-of-records notice that the final rule says must publish before its ballot portal can operate has not published; the Federal Register returns nine Postal Service documents since August 1 and none is a Privacy Act notice, so by the rule’s own terms the portal is not active ABSENT. No Insurrection Act proclamation, Guard federalization or election emergency appears in the presidential feed for the window. No physician’s memorandum has been posted since May 29, a gap of 93 days, verified by reading the briefings index rather than inferring it; no successor has been named for the departing press secretary, whose stated departure date is the end of this month, or for the departing legislative-affairs director ABSENT. No cert petition or rehearing petition has been filed from the August 21 Second Circuit ruling that a United States Attorney was not lawfully appointed, eight days after the Department said it intended to take the case to the Supreme Court ABSENT. No independent press coverage of the August 27 Federal Register notice was located at all; four searches, including the citation itself, returned the Register page and the statute ABSENT. No detention dataset newer than July 20 exists, twelve filenames probed. No modification extending Camp East Montana has posted. No response to the August 28 trades letter was found. And no subpoena has been identified naming a prediction-market wallet holder, a WLFI stake purchaser, or an envoy’s market position — the eleventh consecutive week this report has recorded that absence ABSENT.

Next week's priorities

September 2, the Missouri Supreme Court hears the redistricting-referendum appeal, against a September 8 deadline for adding a question to the ballot. September 3 carries two: the plaintiff’s reply in the compliance case, and the Commission’s opposition in the broadcast-license case. September 4, the hearing on a restraining order in the newspaper firings. September 10, the fourteen-day order against the ballot rule expires, and the preliminary-injunction motions it left under advisement will have been decided or not. Before any of them, the Governor of California’s action on the enrolled Twenty-Second Amendment certification bill, and any First Circuit ruling on the three appeals docketed August 28.

Eight parallel research tracks; syndications counted as single origins, and one interview wearing seven mastheads counted as one. Number drift resolved this week against origin documents: the vessel tally reconciled at 68, 75 and 82 with an unresolved eight-vessel gap inside one command on one day; the trade counts reconciled to 3,555 in the Office of Government Ethics periodic report, with 14,000 and 21,000 attributed in the letter to a website and a wire; the detention population held at the July 11 snapshot of 65,765 against twelve probes for a newer file; the amicus group that filed on August 28 recorded at 204 former judges, distinct from the 174 whose motion the June order granted. Origin domains fetch-restricted this run: the combatant command, the casualty system, the social platform carrying the tally posts, congressional bill pages by web but not by interface, and the docket service intermittently, which throttled document-level queries and left one state injunction unread.

EDITION 003 · 2026-08-30
