Supporting record · documented

The 1992 federal securities opinion records a $75 million capital contribution by Donald Trump to the Taj partnership and identifies Merrill Lynch as the 1988 bond underwriter.

The reproduced prospectus table lists $675 million in bond proceeds, $75 million in capital and $55 million from other sources. The opinion's opening background instead says $674 million; that source discrepancy is retained. The court says Trump made the required contribution and was not a personal guarantor of the Taj's success. This does not resolve every separate debt or guarantee.

Taj bondholders → Taj Associates

[B] Creditor negotiations · 1990

documented · Contemporary UPI and Washington Post reporting identifies Wilbur Ross of Rothschild Inc. as a Taj bondholder representative. TIME independently reports the firm's creditor role in the 1991 bankruptcy.

Together these establish a corroborated reporting record of creditor-side negotiation and restructuring work. The contemporaneous UPI announcement describes preliminary terms; it is not the final confirmed plan. The engagement agreement, creditor-committee appointment and fee order remain records to retrieve. A personal loan from a Rothschild family member, or continuing institutional control, is not established by these reports.
