Evidence & context

DOCUMENTED RECORD • HISTORICAL REFERENCE

The United States Holocaust Memorial Museum records that President Paul von Hindenburg appointed Hitler chancellor on January 30, 1933; Hitler was not directly elected chancellor.

This historical sequence does not establish equivalence with a contemporary person, party or outcome.

DOCUMENTED RECORD • HISTORICAL LEGAL TEXT AND ATTRIBUTED MUSEUM CONTEXT

The Enabling Act, proclaimed March 24, 1933, authorized the Reich government to enact laws outside the ordinary parliamentary procedure and permitted departures from the constitution within the act's stated exceptions.

The translated law establishes the authority granted. The museum also documents intimidation and exclusion during passage. This historical sequence does not by itself establish a contemporary equivalent.

DOCUMENTED RECORD · CONSTITUTIONAL TEXT

The U.S. Constitution assigns legislative powers to Congress, provides a congressional bill-and-presentment procedure, and vests judicial power in a separate judiciary.

These are the written institutional rules in Articles I and III. Their existence alone does not demonstrate present compliance; that requires dated statutes, orders, judgments and implementation records.

DOCUMENTED RECORD · OFFICIAL ELECTION RESULTS; CORRECTION C-017

The FEC's official 2024 results record Trump with 77,302,580 votes (49.80%) and Harris with 75,017,613 (48.32%); the electoral-vote result was 312-226.

This corrects the preserved Chapter 10 statement that treats 2024 as a national popular-vote loss. Trump won a plurality; a share below 50% does not mean losing the popular vote. It does not predict the 2026 midterms.

Open questions

1. Which historical mechanism is being compared, within which institutional conditions?
2. What material differences or counterexamples limit the comparison?

3. Which observation would support or contradict the proposed comparison?
